of great importance and it is believed that the whole German line is shaking. Nevertheless the enemy is resisting tremendously with extraordinary fierce fighting.

In the opinion of the Daily Mail the breach in the line north of St. Quentin imperils the whole German position. The paper says the break was a tremendous feat that eclipses everything the British have done in the past. No more furious fighting has occurred during the whole war.

Referring particularly to the struggle north of Cambrai the Mail's correspondent says in one sunken road captured by the Canadians and British there was a machine gun for every four yards. Most of them had been disabled by artillery. Along the road bodies mingled with machine gun wreckage.

Fighting never ceased. As day advanced German reinforcements streamed forward in successive groups. The light was very good and British gunners fired many rounds with open sights.

The Germans fell by hundreds but the gaps were filled and the enemy came on in great numbers. They even dented the British advanced line and stopped momentarily further progress. By evening a deadlock was reached and one of the bloodiest combats in recent history began. The enemy suffered terribly, and the British didn't escape unscathed.
